If you feel like you are in the dark when it comes to soccer college recruiting, you need to pay attention to this...There is a lot of competition out there for the limited number of soccer scholarships which are available. Having the right information can be your edge to getting noticed and being recruited.

With the explosion of high school soccer, there are more kids than ever who want to play soccer at the college level. Therefore, soccer college recruiting has gotten more and more competitive.

The current stats show that only about 5% to 7% of all high school soccer players will make it to the college level. Obviously, with those kinds of numbers, the odds are not in your favor as you strive to get recruited. The good news is that you don't necessarily have to be among the best 5% to 7% of all players in the country to make it to the college level! Why? Because many of the best players will always fly under the radar, coaches will never know who they are, and they will therefore never be recruited!

Who is responsible? YOU ARE then your

- ◆ High School or Club Coach
- ◆ High School Counselor

Mistakes Athletes Make

Not keeping the classroom in order

Waiting too long to start the recruiting process

Not being prepared to talk to coaches

Assuming your club or high school coach will get you a scholarship

Mistakes Parents Make

Not getting involved and getting too involved

A very important part of our lives is our children and we all want to look back and know we gave our kids the opportunities to succeed.

Don't allow the recruiting process to be disruptive...take charge yourself
